A Love Letter to My First Home

â€”from the Realtor who loved her first.

Seventeen years ago, I wasnâ€™t yet a real estate agentâ€”I was just a young woman who had recently moved far from home and family. Thatâ€™s when I found her. She had that thingâ€”the kind of presence that speaks quietly to your gut and loudly to your imagination. A little run-down at the time, yes, but with strong bones and a spirit that couldnâ€™t be ignored. A century-old home with a spacious main floor, a sweeping second-floor balcony, and a large backyard. She wasnâ€™t perfect. But she was meant to be mine.

She became my family when my family was so far away. She wasnâ€™t just a place to liveâ€”she helped me find purpose, creativity, and independence. She was where I learned to budget, to repair, to tile, to dream. I painted beside her wood fireplace while watching reruns of old TV shows. I played piano in the dining room, soaked in her deep tub, and prepped meals while gazing into the treed backyard.

If she were a person, she was like a best friend. She made me feel safe when I was alone. She gave me space to learn who I was meant to become. And even when life changedâ€”when one became two, and I moved on to a bigger homeâ€”I couldnâ€™t bear to let her go. I rented her out to people who also loved her, because I couldn't say goodbye. She was mine. And if I could turn back time, I would choose her over and over again.

Through the years, I poured my heart into making her shine. Some things came early or before me—like the bamboo hardwood floors, metal roof, updated plumbing, and electrical. Others are more recent: quartz countertops, new vanities, fridge and hood fan, updated paint, baseboards, casing, light fixtures, a new furnace, and a partially replaced fence. Her style today reflects what I saw in her all those years ago: timeless warmth, with just the right amount of personality—from the soft cabinet wallpaper to the calming sage green vanity.

There are stories embedded in every corner. The second-floor balcony that catches the morning sun. The oversized backyard, with whispers of a century of laughter. The front foyer, where exposed original siding—revealed during a renovation—offers a glimpse into her earliest days. Local lore says she once stood in Alderson, a short-lived prairie town turned ghost town, before being moved to Brooks in the 1920s. That would make her more than just old—she's a piece of prairie history.

My favourite time of day was always dusk. As the sun dipped low, her exterior glowed with a soft golden hue—like a quiet lighthouse guiding you home.

Now comes a new chapter, for both of us. It's time for new memories to be made, and new dreams to be discovered. To the next owner: please take care of my girl. She isn't like the others—and she never was. You can't change the fact that she's stood for over a hundred years—but you just might fall in love with her for exactly that reason.

I did. And I always will.
